Sibilitation with the state of Social Personal &

One of the most delightful parlor entertainments ever given in Scranton was that of yesterday at the handsome home of Mrs. T. H. Watkins, when Mrs. W. A. Staples talked on "The Evolution of American Poetry." Mrs. Staples is a very attractive lady, with a face which dimples brightly as she speaks. She possesses unusual gifts in the way of recitation, and is at her happiest in the expression of dialect sketches. She made a great hit in the lovely little bits from Eugene Field and in her rendition of James Whitcomb Riley's "Our Hired Girl." She brought the house down with the ever-popular "Little Breeches," and incidentally paid a graceful tribute to Minister Hay. In beginning she spoke of the rich legacy of the muses in other lands where the fauns and satyrs had inhabited the forests as Pan had piped and Orpheus had touched his lyre. Greece had her Homer, England had a Chaucer, a Spenser, a Shakespeare, Milton and Dryden, Italy had Virgil and Dante, but the fauns and satyrs were the red Indians of the copses and there was little in the early Puritan's experience to encourage poesy. The mother of American verse, Anne Bradstreet, the daughter of Governor Dudley and wife of Governor Bradwas then mentioned. Officer Wendell Holmes was a direct descendant of this primitive congstress. The speaker then rapidly passed on down the line from Mother Goose to the great poets of later days, reciting many a stanza as she touched upon the various writers. Her recital of a portion of Eryant's "Thanatopsis," of Bayard Taylor's "Metempsychosis of the Pine." of Lowell's "Vision of Sir Launfal," of "Dorothy and I," and "The Last Leaf," and the chambered nautilus of Hoimes were a distinct pleasure. None of the greater poets and few of those we term minor were omitted. One of the successes of the afternoon was her ren-dering of "Grigsby's Station," by Riley. In conclusion she recited "The Star Spangled Banner."

All these arrangements were made, however, without expecting a continuation of the past six weeks of rain and the usual result ensued. It rained on Monday, Tuesday and so on, and the picnic will not be held until next week, when it is hoped the children will not again be disappointed.

About 60 couple enjoyed the excellent programme of dances provided by the Outing club in their first annual "Country Dance" held last Monday evening at the Throop Borough hall. Professor H. D. Taylor had charge of the dancing and Mrs. Agnes Malett furnished the music. The party returned to the ceptral city at midnight by means of two special cars provided by the club.

The overture regarding the business affairs and matters pertaining to the resources of the church, now before the general assembly of the Presby-terian church, is not likely to receive favorable attention. A large majority of the Presbyterians throughout the denomination have declared against it. The Lackawanna Presbytery voted almost unanimously in opposition. The general opinion is that the care of the ousiness affairs by the Session would impair its usefulness. Others also argue that it frequently occurs that there Repels the invading germs that is exceptional talent in the congregamake grlp and pneumonia if tion at large, outside the eldership, for the management and supervision of the once they find a lodgment in the care of church property and funds, for salaries and expenses of music, etc. In body. One of the most enjoyable days in the calendar is Children's Day, which with most churches occurs on the second Sunday in June. Unusual preparations are being made this year in many of our Sunday schools for an attractive as well as an instructive programme. The special offerings of the day are generally devoted to Sunday school mission work in our own country.

Suntational distribution of the ONE WOMAN'S VIEWS. Samunamanna same

I suppose that women who write for the papers must fill a certain amount of space, but sometimes it does seem rather a pity that other people are expected to read the material thus supplied. Often, too, they are expected to profit by the advice given, which is adding insult to injury.

For instance The Ladies' Home Jour nal published explicit directions last month regarding the proper care of a girl's wardrobe. The girl who conscien tiously followed these directions would be an unmitigated little prig and would never have a moment to employ in kind thought of others or gentle deeds that help to make the earth bright. She would never in this world get time to do anything for anybody but her self or to think of anything but her own personal appearance. She would really be a most uncomfortable person to have in the house, and everybody would breathe a sigh of relief when she took herself, her five "hat boxes with the name of each hat marked plainly on the side," her array of bodices and the houseful of tissue paper required to keep them in shape; the numberless sets of "trees" for her shoes, the multitude of bettles of benzine, naptha and other malodorous "cleaners;" her many receptacles for each separate piece of jewelry, her wealth of dress-frames and the quantity of other paraphenalia necessary to a self respecting young woman, away for the summer.

This article starts out with the everasting fairy tale of the way Queen Victoria's daughters have all been brought up to mend and darn and nake over their own gowns, All I have to say on this point is that if the said daughters were obliged to do these things what should have been the happiest girlhood in the world must have been largely wasted. What is the use of being the daughter of the greatest queen on earth if one must attend to the sordid duties of life in early youth, even to the extent of performing that most loathed of all tasks every normally constituted girl, making over old clothes? I don't believe they ever did it, do you?

This "Ashmore girl" in the article ever was in too much of a hurry when she came in from the street to look all over her gown to see if it needed nending, to brush and put it away carefully, and stuff the bodice with the all pervading tissue paper; to take off her shoes and stuff them with some more tissue paper or "trees;" to assume her slippers, and probably rub the street boots with vaseline for a half hour or more; to fold her veil "the other way" and put its own special pin therein; to brush her hat and put it in its own special, beforementioned and labeled box-having previously, of course, freshened the artificial flowers by pulling and bending and straightening each. (Imagine daily "pulling and bending and straightening" each artificial flower on the present day nat!) besides looking carefully over her gloves, wiping her umbrella with a silk rag and doing several dozen other things, the neglect of which would at once stamp her as untidy and unstable in character. Oh, dear, oh, dear! to think of being born a girl and having a mamma or a maiden aunt who would insist upon this programme! One can imagine that a girl having been brought up after this fashion would develop into a wife whose husband and other male relaives would welcome with tears of joy war or anything that would promse to take them out of her immediate of high standing and an enterprising citivicinity. A girl who would pitch things toward the four corners of the room would be preferable as a companion.

Now, I'm not encouraging untidiess. Anything but a girl who goes about with the buttons off her shoes, or the hem of her gown frayed, or a nissing link in the connection of her shirt waist and skirt. She hasn't any right to be careless in these and kindred matters any more than she has to thew gum in the street cars or other public places. But the average girl, if she is any sort of use in the world, is obliged to scurry out and in the house Pe-ru-na has made. a half dozen times a day, at least, and if she should stop to change her shoes each time, to do the amount of brushing to her apparel, and the amount of tissue paper "stuffing" recommended in the Ashmore regime, either she would be a driveling idiot after a week of it, or her family would desire to break up housekeeping. There is such a thing as being possessed of a neat devil, and the Ashmore girl would become one of the earliest victims.

A man was heard to remark not long ago, "I have the best wife a man ever married. She never left anything undone yet that a weman ought to do, but sometimes I think we'd all be happier if she had. This everlasting dusting, cleaning and regulating business is a mania with her and the whole amount of it is, none of us ever have a cery good time in the house for fear we may forget and pulla rocker too far out of its orbit; disarrange the exact angles formed by the books on the nights, and was trouplace. Sometimes when she goes away | tion.
